NFMRI Medical Research Innovation Conference: Registrations Now Open

The NFMRI's inaugural Medical Research Innovation Conference will take place at the Australian National Maritime Museum in Sydney, New South Wales on the 9th and 10th of September 2015. "Putting rubber on the road" will be launched by Mr Paul Clitheroe AM and includes a fantastic line-up of speakers over both days.

This conference was developed as a platform to explore opportunities and solutions to address issues facing the sector and to highlight the importance of philanthropic, government and private support for medical research innovation.

We will also explore and discuss how this support can be used to positively enable the research system and ultimately accelerate the speed at which discoveries can be brought to the hands of those in need.

This event will bring together local and international experts to explore policy issues, promote public debate, build networks and bring together philanthropists, private and social investors, government, trusts and foundations, the not-for-profit sector, corporations and industry executives, as well as research leaders, knowledge commercialisation specialists, universities and medical research institutes.

A conference program has been released and is available on our website. Early bird registrations are now open - take advantage of our special pricing until COB on 31 July 2015, after which full registration costs will apply. For more information on the conference, registrations and sponsorship opportunities, please visit our conference page.

NFMRI wishes to thank our Conference Partner, NSW Department of Primary Industries, for supporting the two-day event and our Conference Supporter, Celgene.

Supporting Biomedical Research and Innovations

This short presentation provides some background to the conference. It outlines support for biomedical innovations and the need enable collaborations to put rubber on the road.
